Why Stephen King is still so powerful, according to ‘Doctor Sleep’s’ director

Over the last 2 years, Stephen King has seen the adaptations of his novels It, It: Chapter 2, Gerald’s Game, Pet Sematary and 1992 all receive critical acclaim.

GREGORY WAKEMAN MWN

That might make some people believe that King is in the midst of a Hollywood renaissance. But the truth is, with his novels having been adapted 48 times in 43 years, King’s work has always been popular with audiences and studios alike.

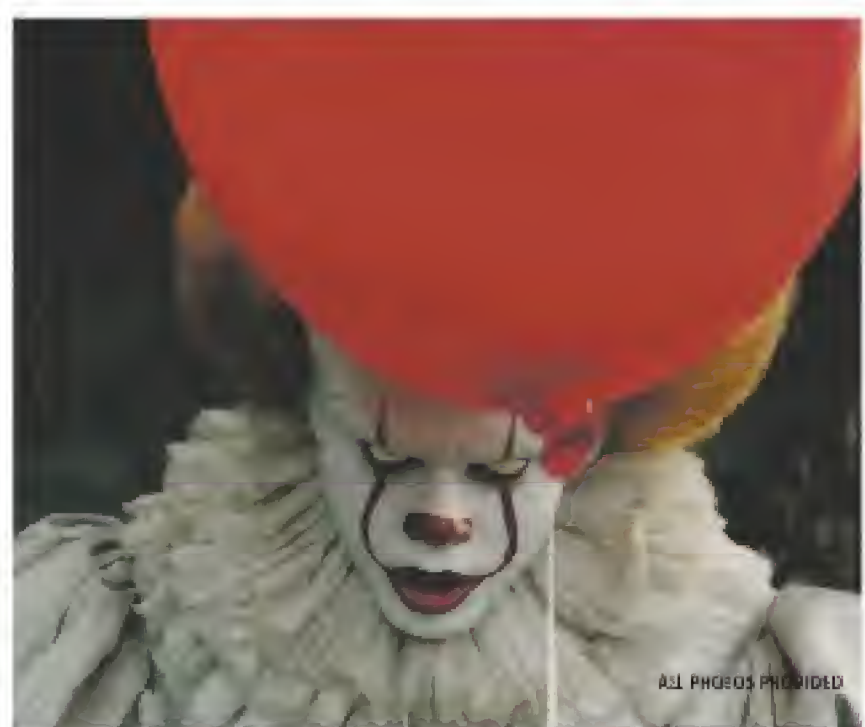

This popularity shows no signs of dying, as “Doctor Sleep”, King’s 2013 follow-up to “The Shining”, is now the 49th adaptation, with three more already confirmed. But what makes Stephen King’s books so powerful that they’re turned into movies over and over again?

Mike Flanagan, who is the director tasked with telling the story of a grown-up, alcoholic Dan Torrance (Ewan McGregor) trying to overcome the mystical and sinister events that happened in “The Shining”, has the answer.

“I think it is because, for as fantastic and huge as his stories and ideas get, they’re all incredibly relatable,” Flanagan tells Metro. “Look at It. We’re talking about a giant demon that takes the shape of a clown to kill children, which is a huge idea, but the fear of a child that exists in a world without a safety net and can be quietly victimized by their own fear and terror, and no-one intervenes to help him? That’s super relatable.”

Flanagan believes all of King’s books and stories are like that, adding, “They’re all meditations on very universal feelings of anxiety, weakness and fear, and the best and worst of our human nature. When adapted properly, his stories really focus on universal ideas. It makes the grand supernatural ideas of them all the more impactful and entertaining and a way for us to really examine those big ideas in a safe space that is also exaggerated, but also teaches us how to be braver.”

But what is it specifically about “The Shining” and “Doctor Sleep”, and the stories of Jack and Danny Torrance, that has resonated with pop culture and mainstream audiences so deeply?

“They endure, because as a story about scary ghosts in the bathtub it is really scary,” he insists. “But as a story about domestic violence, alcoholism and the most toxic masculinity imaginable, those things reverberate because they are so relatable.”

Flanagan feels especially lucky and privileged to be directing

ner Bros executive Jon Berg told Flanagan he thought the book was unadaptable, Berg then teased that they were trying to make “Doctor Sleep”. Flanagan took this opportunity to quickly pitch his vision for a “Doctor Sleep” movie, before the conversation turned back to DC

Doctor Sleep, because the chance to do so actually emerged completely by accident. In fact, Flanagan was actually meeting with Warner Bros to discuss his potential involvement in the DC Universe when the conversation turned to “Gerald’s Game”, another Stephen King book that he had just made for Netflix.

After Warner

ner Bros executive Jon Berg told Flanagan he thought the book was unadaptable, Berg then teased that they were trying to make “Doctor Sleep”. Flanagan took this opportunity to quickly pitch his vision for a “Doctor Sleep” movie, before the conversation turned back to DC

“I left the meeting just thinking it was a great conversation. But by the time I had got to my car Berg had called Stephen King, who had just seen and been pleased by ‘Gerald’s Game’, told him my vision, and then it all took off like a shot,” recalls Flanagan, who admits that he then immediately became terrified at the prospect of actually turning “Doctor Sleep” into a movie

“I’d never had anything like that happen to me in my career before. All the way through the production, I was just like, ‘Is this really gonna happen this way? This seems crazy!’ I almost feel like it is the most stripped down version of what I used to think the industry is like before I was in it.”

You’ll get to see what Mike Flanagan does with Doctor Sleep when it is released on November 8.

GET THAT VERY MERRY FEELING.

YOUR WEEKEND STARTS NOW

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Need some help making holiday plans? We've got you covered. From festivals to concerts and more, here are the best things to do in Boston this weekend.

COMICS COME HOME

Boston's biggest comedy event of the year returns on Saturday to celebrate its 25th anniversary. The annual show, in support of the Carn Neely Foundation, will once again feature Denis Leary as host, along with a stacked lineup of comedy stars, including Bill Burr, John Mulaney, Pete Holmes and more.

Nov. 9, 8 p.m., TD Garden, 100 Legends Way, $50-50+, tdgarden.com

NICK KROLL

While the veteran comic won't be joining his fellow "The Oh, Hello Show" star John Mulaney at Comics Come Home on Saturday, fans still have a chance to see Nick Kroll perform in the Bay State this weekend. He's scheduled for two shows at the Chevalier Theatre on Friday as part of his "Middle-Aged Boy" tour.

Nov. 8, Chevalier Theatre, 30 Forest St., Medford, $34, chevaliertheatre.com

BOSTON CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL

Thanksgiving is still a few weeks away, but that doesn't mean we can't get into the Christmas spirit. The Boston Christmas Festival returns for its 33rd year this weekend for three days of holiday fun. Stop by the Seaport World Trade Center to enjoy the festivities, which include over 350 artisan pop-up shops, so plenty of options to find that perfect gift this year.

Nov. 8-10, Seaport World Trade Center Boston, $14, boston-christmasfestival.com

HARPOON FRIENDSGIVING

Enjoy a brew or two with your buds at Harpoon this weekend. The Boston brewery is hosting a Friendsgiving event on Sunday, complete with a full feast courtesy of Whole Foods Market, with proceeds going to benefit the Greater Boston Food Bank. Tickets include a turkey dinner, three beer tickets, a take home gift, plus live entertainment.

Nov. 10, 6 p.m., Harpoon, 306 Northern Ave., $70, 21+, harpoonfriendsgiving2019.splashthat.com

WICKED WINE FEST

Have a wicked good time when this vino-filled fest returns for its fall edition this weekend. The Wicked Wine Fest will take over the Revere Hotel Boston Common for three sessions on Saturday featuring plenty of samples as well as a silent auction of signed sports memorabilia, with proceeds going to benefit Project Smile.

Nov. 9, Revere Hotel Boston Common, 200 Stuart St., $49+, 21+, eventbrite.com

"COME FROM AWAY"

The acclaimed musical by Irene Sankoff and David Hein kicks off its run in Boston this week. Head to the Citizens Bank Opera House this month to check out this true story about a small town in Canada that took care of 7,000 travelers who were stranded when 38 planes were forced to land unexpectedly in the wake of the 9/11 attacks.

Through Nov. 17, Citizens Bank Opera House, 539 Washington St., $40+, bostonoperahouse.com

"RENT"

This weekend is your last chance to check out the legendary show while its 20th anniversary tour sets up shop at the Shubert Theatre. Snag a ticket and belt out all your favorite "Rent" tunes while seeing the hit production live on stage.

Through Nov. 10, Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., $48+, bochcenter.org

BOW MARKET 1 YEAR ANNIVERSARY

The Somerville hotspot celebrates its first anniversary this weekend. Head to Bow Market on Saturday afternoon and evening to see how the vendors are honoring the big day.

Nov. 9, noon, Bow Market, 1 Bow Market Way, bowmarket-somerville.com

DAN AYKROYD

The weekend is just packed with appearances by comedy all-stars. Head to Peabody on Saturday for a chance to meet Dan Aykroyd, as the "Saturday Night Live" legend will be making a special appearance at Kappy's Fine Wine & Spirits in support of Crystal Head Vodka.

Nov. 9, 1 p.m., Kappy's Fine Wine & Spirits, 175 Andover St., Peabody, kappys.com

JONATHAN VAN NESS

The "Queer Eye" star and Elizabeth Warren fanboy is back in the Hub this weekend. Jonathan Van Ness will stop by the Orpheum Theatre for two back-to-back shows on Friday night as part of his "Road to Beijing" tour.

Nov. 8, Orpheum Theatre, 1 Hamilton Pl., $55+, crossroadspresents.com

Living their maturity - JONAS BROTHERS

Nick, Joe and Kevin left their egos behind to share their happiness on stage. Joe chatted with Metro about the band's new tour. GABRIELA ACOSTA SILVA, MWN

The Jonas Brothers are in the middle of their Happiness Begins Tour. The band's comeback to stages worldwide has become a musical injection to lift the spirits of its followers. No matter the age, everyone starts to move their feet when they hear the songs of this band composed by Joe, Nick and Kevin Jonas. In the midst of a pop landscape widely dominated by reunions, the brothers are willing to take on this tour to share their happiness. Joe Jonas spoke with Metro about this path besides his partners in crime.

“We want our fans to know that we can’t wait to look them in the eyes and sing intensely.”
Joe Jonas

without worries, we are just having a good time.

40

Tour dates are on the Jonas Brothers' agenda until February 2020, for North America and Europe.

What broke when you guys split up and what brought you back together again?
When the band broke up, we were a little angry and it was complicated. The music was not as strong as it had been, we weren't selling as many tickets; besides, our relationship was not healthy. We were not communicating as we should. We always thought that this bad stage would pass and that we would eventually get back together. Now we're living a maturity in every sense.

How have you taken the tour's success?

It's been amazing! We have grown with the music, the feeling of being together, the audience reacting quickly and that our new songs "Sucker," "Only Human" and "Cool" have reached the world fast, is a good sign. We feel lucky and happy, and that only makes us want to work harder, because we want to stay on stage for a while.

How serious are you when making music?
Our job is to have a great time at our concerts. We have worked a lifetime for it. Therefore, nobody takes music as seriously as we do. We are also at a stage with a lot of personal and professional balance, it shows in what we do.

Some people claim that the Jonas Brothers will not last long, what do you think of that?
Tell them to talk to us in five years. [Laughs]

Pop has been very questioned in recent years, what do you think about that?
I think it's going through a serious time. I think there are many artists who make pop that does not lead to anything ... I don't know, so I hope we are bringing something different and fun, but that people take seriously.

What is the biggest gift that being in this band has given you?
It has brought us a lot of happiness, it is something that all of us always wanted to do and while we enjoy doing it, without pressure and

5 ways to celebrate Veterans Day in Boston

Boston will join the rest of the nation in honoring our military heroes when Veterans Day returns on Monday. The federal holiday, which coincides with Armistice Day, gives us a chance to honor our brave men and women who have served, as well as reflect on the sacrifices they've made in order to protect our country and freedoms. Here are five ways to celebrate Veterans Day in Boston this year.

Veterans Day Parade

Join fellow Bostonians in honoring our vets during the annual parade on Monday. The festivities will begin at noon this year, with marchers beginning their procession at Boylston and Charles Streets. The parade will then proceed up Boylston to Tremont, before heading to City Hall Plaza for the end of the event. The parade is free to attend and is scheduled to occur rain or shine. Noon, Boylston and Charles Streets,

Village on Monday. In honor of Veterans Day, the Bay State institution is offering free admission to all active, veteran and retired members of the military and their families. Old Sturbridge Village will also have special historical activities for the holiday, including demonstrations, displays of past military uniforms and weapons, and more. 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m., Old Sturbridge Village, 1 Old Sturbridge Village Rd., Sturbridge, osv.org/event/veterans-day

Boston Children's Museum

This museum also has a special deal in honor of Veterans Day. Active duty personnel and all veterans who stop by on Monday will receive complimentary admission. The local institution will also allow up to three additional family members to receive half-priced admission. 10 a.m.-5 p.m., Boston Children's Museum, 308 Congress St., bostonchildrensmuseum.org METRO STAFF

boston.gov/calendar/veterans-day-parade

Armistice Day For Peace Event

In honor of Armistice Day, Veterans for Peace and other activists will also be holding a parade on Monday. The event, which pays tribute to the peace secured during the end of World War I, advocates for global peace. The festivities will kick off from Charles and Beacon Streets and culminate with an event at Faneuil Hall. Noon, Charles and Beacon Streets, masspeaceaction.org/event/armistice-day-for-peace-2019

Tuscan Kitchen

The Italian restaurant chain continues its tradition of giving back to military members in honor of Veterans Day. On Monday, Tuscan Kitchen will serve thousands of complimentary lunches to veterans and active personnel at each of its locations around New England. The complementary meal is available for vets and active military members plus one guest via reservation, and includes a three-course lunch menu. 11 a.m.-4 p.m., various locations, tuscan-brands.com

BLUETOOTH HEADPHONE

Dear Bill,

I will assume, like me, that you are the proud owner of an older phone or such technology that still "has" a headphone jack. As most new phones and music players have been upgraded and made thinner, the headphone jack has been eliminated (see iPhone) and Bluetooth is the "only" way to use these devices if you want to privately listen to them.

As you are likely aware, one of the physical drawbacks to corded headphones, as I am well-aware, is the repetitive stress of plugging and unplugging them, along with the oft chance you drop the device while they are connected, which can cause the jack or the plug to malfunction, causing you to have to get new headphones or have the jack replaced or repaired.

As I do not see that trend reversing at all, as the millennials do enjoy their Bluetooth, I'd gladly take your $5 had I a way to accept it. If you are unwilling to 'cut the cord,' as it were, when the time eventually comes to upgrade, you can purchase a Bluetooth receiver for your headphones on Amazon, which will allow you to retain your corded preference and non-falling-out of those dreaded AirPods, for instance. I hope you can find it in you to gracefully accept this grumbly future.

Resolutions specify MBTA Board's commuter rail vision

More frequent, electric-powered services among measures stated.

letters@metro.us

The five resolutions the MBTA Board adopted Monday call not only for a commuter rail system with more frequent, electric-powered service, but also focus on additional parking, station connections and high-level accessible platforms.

Although members of the Fiscal and Management Control Board made edits, the resolutions approved unanimously closely reflect the versions drafted by Chairman Joseph Aiello calling for MBTA staff to work toward transforming the current commuter rail system "into a significantly more productive, equitable and decarbonized enterprise."

MBTA train.

The only major changes to the original proposals were the addition of a fifth resolution calling for a new bus transformation office and clarification that work to develop high-level platform boarding is consistent with the ongoing Program for Accessible Transportation Investment aiming at a similar goal, according to the resolutions the T provided Tuesday.

Planned service intervals will not be universal across the system, but the board instructed the MBTA to work toward rapid transit-like conditions with 15- or 20-minute gaps between trains, maximizing return on investment in the next decade with focus on lines that will see the greatest increase in ridership.

The board also "expects that the system of the future will be largely electrified" and urged the Legislature to adopt language in Gov. Charlie Baker's bond bill reforming the T's procurement practices, which influence the pace of work.

Based on the approved resolutions, the MBTA over the next three months will develop a rail transformation office and the bus transformation office and, in the short term, work toward electrifying the Providence/Stoughton Line, the Fairmount Line and parts of the Newburyport/Rockport Line from Boston to Lynn.

Camera-based enforcement pitched as congestion buster

Drivers who go too far into an intersection and block traffic from advancing in other directions would face penalties even if a police officer is not present under legislation Boston city officials touted Wednesday.

The bills (H 2971 / S 2045) would allow municipalities to install cameras that would record photos and video of cars that begin moving through a traffic light but do not clear the intersection before the signal changes.

The practice, often referred to as "blocking the box," creates congestion headaches, and while police could pull drivers over to write citations, that often adds to traffic, according to Boston Police Department Deputy Superintendent

Kevin McGoldrick.

"Enforcement by traditional measures is very challenging and arguably exacerbates the problem," McGoldrick told the Joint Committee on Transportation at a Wednesday hearing.

Under the bills, violations could be issued based on recorded camera images. Supporters said the language includes privacy provisions that prevent that information from being used for non-enforcement purposes.

The legislation would also allow municipalities to use cameras to impose violations on drivers who fail to stop for school buses, a proposal included in other bills the Transportation Committee is vetting.

State reports third vaping-related death

The man reportedly vaped nicotine and THC.

SHNS
letters@metro.us

A Worcester County man in his 50s was the third Massachusetts resident to die of a vaping-associated lung injury, the Department of Public Health announced Wednesday morning.

The man, whom public health officials did not identify, had reportedly vaped both nicotine and THC, the psychoactive compound in marijuana. DPH had previously reported the vaping-related deaths of a woman in her 40s from Middlesex County and a woman in her 60s from Hampshire County, both of whom reportedly vaped nicotine.

ISTOCK

"This disease is serious and potentially fatal and we are continuing to investigate the cause," DPH Commissioner Monica Bharel said in a statement. The state has not said when any of the three deaths occurred.

Since Sept. 11, DPH said it has received 220 reports from doctors of suspected vaping-associated lung injuries, 127 of which meet the criteria for further DPH investigation. Ninety-five investigations have been completed, and 21 confirmed and 47 probable cases have been reported to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Gov. Charlie Baker imposed a temporary ban on the sale of all vaping products amid a nationwide outbreak of vaping-related illnesses and deaths. Baker said he imposed the ban "to put a pause on the market and to give legislators, regulators, data scientists, health care professionals and others a chance to try and figure out just what exactly was going on here."

Chef Alex Guarnaschelli, GMM

Alex Guarnaschelli is a special guest at the Borgata Hotel, Casino & Spa's Savor Borgata event.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Iron Chef Alex Guarnaschelli has dipped her spoon into many pots in the culinary world with a variety of cookbooks, TV shows on Food Network and even her own restaurant in NYC: Butter.

This weekend you can catch the New York native in Atlantic City as a special guest this year at the Borgata Hotel, Casino & Spa's Savor Borgata event featuring a colorful variety of food-related events.

Guarnaschelli is just one of the many talented culinary mavens appearing this weekend at the Borgata (along with Michael Schulson, Bobby Flay and Wolfgang Puck, just to name a few), and each talented chef and Food Network star will be hosting their own interactive class, tasting or special programming.

Guests can catch Guarnaschelli at The Ultimate Food Experience on Saturday (Nov. 9) or at her Holiday Lunch & Learn class that same day.

Guarnaschelli gave Metro the scoop on what to expect at the delicious star-studded extravaganza in Atlantic City this weekend.

Savor Borgata is truly a colorful showcase of all things culinary. What

This weekend is going to be delicious events will you be involved with throughout the weekend?

I am excited to participate in the big Savor Borgata walk-around tasting event that Saturday evening. It's also a competition as a winning dish will be picked from all the offerings from the chefs, and I am also doing a special class called "Lunch and Learn" Saturday afternoon. I will be cooking up a lot of fun small plates that will hopefully inspire great holiday menus!

What do you think some of the best attributes are that an event like Savor Borgata: The Ultimate Food Experience brings for foodies?

I always think it's great when people get to interact with their favorite chefs. It's obviously an opportunity for chefs in the public to get to know each other and have a great conversation about food.

What do you personally like the most about hosting events like your Holiday Lunch and Learn? I like the intimacy that comes from a classroom type of experience where excited foodies and home cooks get to taste dishes from professional chefs. The lineup of chefs is very impressive this year, and I think it's nice that there is a lot of fun and festiveness. I like it even better that there are also smaller-scale events where people can do a deep dive into great food and good cooking ideas.

Is there anything special about any event at Savor Borgata that you want guests to know about?

The Lunch and Learn event is what I am especially excited about. I love that we are getting so close to the holiday season and going to be talking about what kinds of new dishes can be brought to the table. I love the Savor Borgata main event too, though, and if I were a guest, I'd go to each table and eat one of each dish.

You've said that you're passionate about American ingredients, what are some of your go-to essential ingredients or recipes?

Corn grits from the south. Tree nuts from California and Oregon. Lobsters from Maine. Those are some American essentials for me. Essentials for my cooking are Dijon and red wine vinegar. I can pretty much make anything if I have those hanging around my pantry.

FOR THE SAKE OF MOOKIE, TRADE J.D.

Sorry, J.D. It's not you. It's us.

That would be my message to J.D. Martinez, if I was calling the shots for the Boston Red Sox this offseason. It would serve as the explanation for why he's being shopped in a potential trade this winter.

For the record, I have no idea if Martinez is actually being shopped, or if the Red Sox would ever even consider trading him. But what I do know is that Martinez has decided not to opt out of his current deal. Instead, he plans on returning to Boston to play out the third year of his five-year, $110 million contract, in which he's owed $23.8 million in 2020.

Martinez, 32, had until this past Monday night to decide whether or not to opt out and become a free agent.

OPINION

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter: @dannypicard

In a decision that came down to the wire — publicly, at least — the Red Sox' DH chose to stick around.

It's good news, and it's bad news. The good news is, if the 2020 season began today, then the Red Sox are retaining a guy who has a total of 79 home runs and 235 RBI over the last two seasons. The bad news? It just got a lot harder to make Mookie Betts a significant contract offer this winter.

Betts, 27, still has one more year left on his deal with the Red Sox, in the form of arbitration eligibility. If he wants, he can become an unrestricted free agent next offseason. You would think that the Red Sox would want to make the attempt, right now, to prevent him from hitting that free-agent market, where he'll undoubtedly be asking for a contract worth somewhere between Bryce Harper's $330 million deal and Mike Trout's $430 million deal. Who knows, Betts might even strive to make more than Trout. I'm just not so sure he'd be able to get it.

Regardless, you know how these things work. Players don't want to talk contract during the season, especially during their season of impending free agency. So, if you're the Red Sox, you need to have that ever-so-serious conversation with Betts right now. If there's a reasonable number that each side can work around, and you're confident that the framework of a blockbuster contract extension with Betts is in place, then the next move should be an easy one: trade Martinez.

The Red Sox have gone on the record with their desire to get underneath the $208 million luxury tax threshold this offseason. In order to get Betts' attention with a significant offer, they'll have to shed salary somewhere.

A major factor to consider with Martinez is that he also has the ability to opt out of his Red Sox contract next offseason. And it should be noted that in each of the final two years of his deal, his salary will go down to $19.4 million. So it's quite possible that Martinez will choose to opt out next winter, rather than take a $4 million pay cut. Imagine losing both Martinez and Betts to free agency in the same offseason?

According to reports, as part of the "limited" no-trade clause in Martinez' contract, he has until the end of November to give the Red Sox a list of three teams that he cannot be traded to. Still, something tells me there'd be more than three American League teams interested in acquiring Martinez. Who knows, maybe a National League team wants to get nuts and stick him in right field.

What would be a better business decision: giving a significant pay raise to a 33-year-old DH next winter, or giving a significant pay raise to a 27-year-old Gold Glove right fielder this winter? I'll choose the latter.

And the Red Sox should too.

Hope you understand, J.D.

Patriots still favorites to win it all

VSIN

And, just like that, dreams of an undefeated season are over for the defending Super Bowl champion New England Patriots.

The Pats will enjoy a well-timed bye this week before tackling the rest of a midseason gauntlet featuring Philadelphia, Dallas, Houston, and Kansas City.

They certainly weren't exposed as a "pretender" last week in Baltimore. But, the Ravens showed that the AFC Championship chase isn't a one-team race. Baltimore (+3) won 37-20, winning total yardage 372-342, yards-per-play 5.7 to 5.3, rushing yards 210-74, third down conversions 50 percent to 38 percent, and drive points (those scored by the offense on drives of 60 yards or more) by a count of 27-10.

A potential playoff rematch would likely be in Foxboro, unless that gauntlet proves even tougher than expected. You can see the Pats have a few things to work on.

Betting markets still consider New England as clear Super Bowl favorites. The Patriots have the inside track for #1 seed in the AFC brackets. Power Ratings suggest they would be at least slight favorites over any NFC entry (laying a small number to New Orleans or San Francisco, a larger number vs. others).

Here are the latest odds to win the Super Bowl from the respected Westgate in Las Vegas (percentage equivalents in parenthesis)...

New England 5/2 (29%), New Orleans 9/2 (18%), Baltimore 6/1 (14%), San Francisco 7/1 (13%), Kansas City 8/1 (11%), Green Bay 14/1 (7%), Dallas 20/1 (5%), Houston, Philadelphia, Minnesota, Seattle 25/1 (4% each).

Sportsbooks build a universe larger than 100 percent to create a house edge. Kansas City's chances will improve if Patrick Mahomes can return from a knee injury at something resembling last season's MVP form.

This weekend's prime time NFL action will feature teams on that short list. Sunday, Dallas will likely close as a 3-point favorite at home against Minnesota (NBC, 8:20 p.m.). Monday, San Francisco will likely close near a 6-point favorite at home against Seattle (ESPN, 8:15 p.m.).

Other Notes:

"Thursday night's NFL attraction features a pair of AFC Wild-card threats who are capable of peaking late and causing headaches for opponents in the playoffs. The Los Angeles Chargers visit the Oakland Raiders (FOX/NFL Network, 8:20 p.m.). L.A. will likely close as a small favorite.

The Chargers (+4) dominated Green Bay 26-11 last week after turning the offense over to a new coordinator

ALL GETTY IMAGES

(winning yardage 442-184 and yards-per-play 6.5 to 3.8). Oakland is 4-4 despite facing the second-toughest schedule in the league according to Jeff Sagarin's computer ratings at USA Today.

"Ferschtman takes a subtly shaded approach, the brilliance and energy of her performance thoroughly compelling. The moments when the texture clears and the solo violin emerges alone are particularly entrancing, and Ferschtman's artistry and flair never falter." —THE STRAD
